VOLUME 11 ISSUE 6

Trials, Suffering, and the Glory of God

Much of our lives are spent in the day to day tasks of the mundane. We hit the snooze button a few times and drag ourselves out of bed. We get ready for school, work, church, or a day of leisure. Throughout the day the normal stresses of our work-a-day life keep us busy. Some days are more stressful than others. For the student, exams, papers or even a tough final, make for unusually hard moments that break us from simply going through the motions. For the parent, school projects, Field Day, transitions from one grade to another penetrate the monotony of the normal five days a week churn. For most of our lives, we spend the majority of our days, weeks, months, and even years in a pattern of relatively normal hustle and bustle. There are moments that shatter this pattern, that push us to our knees, that cause us to take pause, and truly contemplate the meaning of it all.

This past weekend in Mexico, we delivered the systematic theology books along with the cards and letters from Matthew Road members to the pastors there. It is always so encouraging to connect with our friends who serve the church so faithfully in conditions that are often much more difficult than ours. Often they describe daily struggles that feel much weightier than what many of us face daily. We have had pastors pulled over by the cartels on their journey to or from the conference. Some have been threatened with extortion or kidnapping. Others struggle daily with the financial challenges of pastoring a small church in their context. Many have family stresses much like we do. It's a battle to get to school and work on time. It's a battle to get homework completed and handle life transitions gracefully.

This weekend provided new opportunities to hear some of their trials. One pastor informed us that he has been pastoring a church that was about an hour drive from his home. Four weeks ago, when he returned from a Sunday of leading the church, he discovered that the cartels had taken over his home. His family is currently living in the church. They have essentially lost everything with no recourse. Our theology collides with our experience in this moment. Here is a family serving God with integrity and yet they are plunged into trouble at the hands of evil men. They will likely never recover any of the financial losses associated with this injustice. Additionally, the constant emotional press due to the violation on such a personal level will likely be with them for quite some time. How are we to understand these things? Where is God in the midst of their suffering? Why would he allow sin to reign over this family and their church?

We read in the New Testament that none of these things surprise God. When Jesus taught His disciples not to worry about tomorrow, He told them, "each day has enough trouble of its own." On the night Christ was betrayed into the hands of the religious leaders, the night before His crucifixion, He told the disciples, "In the world you have tribulation, but take courage; I have overcome the world." There is not promise of trouble free living because we are followers of Christ. There is no Christian exemption card to trials and no "get out of tribulation" pass. All kinds of trials come into the lives of Christians. Some face greater persecution because of their faith in Christ. Others face trouble because of the sinful, fallen world that permeates every facet of our lives. There are even those who will suffer at the hands of illness or injury not perpetrated directly from the hands of wicked people.

All of these, every type of trial and tribulation, is used by God for His glory and for our character. This theological underpinning prompted James to write the church, “consider it all joy when you encounter various trials...” Joy undergirds the heart of the believer when facing trials. Why? How can this be? Because of what we know. We know that God works through our trials to bring glory to His name and everlasting joy to His children. Paul, who also suffered greatly for his faith, wrote to the church at Corinth, “Therefore we do not lose heart, but though our outer man is decaying, yet our inner man is being renewed day by day. For momentary, light affliction is producing for us an eternal weight of glory far beyond all comparison, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.” These trials are temporary, momentary. These trials, as weighty as they feel, are light in comparison to the weight of glory. Our hearts break, and rightly so, for the injustices directed at our brothers and sisters around the world. Our hearts break when various trials and difficulties come to fellow believers due to disease or illness or financial calamity. God’s heart breaks too. However, He doesn’t lose the trial to the sands of time. He preserves it in heaven with a much greater and longer-lasting “weight of glory.” One day the dawn will break on eternity and we will feel the shackles of this broken world fall from our lives forever. On that day, the greatest pain suffered by believers in this life will seem small and temporary as the fullness of the glory of God permeates that moment. Until then, we watch and pray, walking faithfully with Him in good times and in bad.

Since the Reformation, Protestants have assumed that salvation, spiritual growth, leadership and reproducible ministry all depended on high levels of literacy. Not all people, however, prefer to learn and grow in this way, or even have access to it. Does this mean they can not believe, grow, lead or minister? Those who don't learn by literate means prefer oral methods: story and dialogue, song, dance, drama, proverbs, and riddles. Tom will demonstrate storying and dialogue as a highly reproducible way to get the Word of God into the hearts of people without depending on literacy.

Chronological Bible Storying allows a person to build ministry competence around a series of stories chosen for a theme, for example, "Genesis to Jesus" or "The Life of Jesus" or "How to be a Disciple." Situational Bible Storying applies a specific story or set of stories to a specific person or situation. Dialogue, or guided question-and-answers, draws out the story's meaning and application. In the end, a person will know the story, its meaning, and be able to tell it to others and guide them with dialogue in the same way. Story by story, brick by brick, your bible knowledge, theological understanding, and ministry competence grows. And it's all in your head and ready to use at any time. You won't ever have to think, "Wait. I used to know that. It's in my notes at home ..."
